The love doctor is in — just about every magazine

She's everywhere!
Cherry Creek singles shrink Carolyn Bushong is dishing out advice or telling it like it is (at least according to her) in every magazine you pick up these days.

In February, McCall's named her one of the six top "Passion Docs" in the country (along with Dr. Laura and John Gray).

She gave advice on what to do with your snoring husband in "Bedside Manners," a story in Good Housekeeping's August issue. Cuddle him, then kick him out, says Bushong.

In September, she dished in Cosmopolitan on movie stars and their "Heartbreak Hair" — seems they get new styles when they break up with their men.

People Magazine's "Sexiest Man Alive" issue hits the stands Friday, with Bushong telling us what makes a man sexy and what makes him stay sexy. She won't say who the hunk is, promising she doesn't know. What's your guess?

You can catch Bushong in a two-page spread in the current issue of National Examiner (the one with Oprah and JonBenét on the cover — duh!).

Here Bushong studies the body language of celebrities lip-locking — saying that they are telling us if they are really in love.

There's Sharon Stone bussing newspaperman Phil Bronstein:

"Her hand on the back of his neck says, 'Kiss me you fool.'"

Julia Roberts and Benjamin Bratt: "There's pure animal passion here."

Pamela Anderson Lee and Tommy Lee rather disgustingly touching tongues. "They're both teasing in a you-turn-me-on way."

Bobby Brown allowing Whitney Houston to kiss him. "His gaze says, 'I'm with her but I'm not really interested.'"

So how does Bushong know what these people are thinking from the way they're kissing? Is it from watching geezers make out at Mel's?

"That's a good one," she laughs. "At Mel's, I can always tell who's mad at each other, who's in love, who's ready for a Thursday night fight. Several couples in there are ready to kill each other."
